Eighth Grade

Self Portraits

Students began this process by taking digital photos of themselves, which were then processed in Photoshop to show simplified black, white and gray shades. Students traced the resulting shapes, and then transferred them to a rubber printing block. At first, students carved away only the white shapes and then printed the results with light colored inks. They then carved out the gray areas and printed the dark colors over the light. The resulting prints show both traces of the original photos as well as the numerous decisions that each student made along the way.
